Culinary arts restaurant opens and baseball field renovated

Moraine Valley Community College recently held two ribbon-cutting ceremonies to commemorate the reopening of its renovated baseball field and opening of its new culinary arts restaurant, Table 67.

The baseball field features new dugouts, backstop and fencing, along with an improved drainage system, which was necessary due to ongoing flooding issues that forced the team to play their home games at a field in Chicago.

The ribbon-cutting ceremony at the field featured remarks from Dr. Sylvia M. Jenkins, college president; Beth McElroy Kirkwood, secretary of the Board of Trustees; Bill Finn, athletic director; and Hugh Dennehy, head baseball coach, who said, "This field is going to serve a great purpose for our young men moving forward. We're very excited for the future of Moraine Valley baseball."

ALUMNI SPOTLIGHT - Glacier lays the foundation for well-known local author, Vicki Quade

"My brother took classes at Moraine Valley and liked it, so I drove out to take a look. I swear, back then, there was nothing out there," Vicki Quade said. When she attended in the early 1970s, she spent much of her time in one of the temporary buildings on campus as a reporter for the college newspaper. "The "Glacier" was in a little trailer. I really loved it," she said.

Shortly after starting at Moraine Valley Community College, Quade's father was in a serious car accident. Despite this tragedy, she stayed in school and joined the "Glacier" as a reporter. In addition to gaining valuable skills for her future journalism career, the "Glacier" created unexpected opportunities for her. Quade recalled how one assignment helped her with her tuition.
